The Old Creation

In The Old Creation, White describes the creation of the world and the fall of man. She argues that the creation account in Genesis is a literal account of historical events. She also argues that the fall of man was a real event that had a profound impact on the human race.

White's understanding of the creation account is based on her belief in the plenary inspiration of the Bible. She believed that the Bible is the infallible word of God, and that it should be interpreted literally unless there is clear evidence to the contrary. She also believed that the creation account is a type of prophecy, and that it foreshadows the future restoration of all things.

The New Creation

In The New Creation, White describes the redemption of man and the restoration of all things. She argues that the death of Jesus Christ on the cross was a substitutionary sacrifice that paid the penalty for sin. She also argues that the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead was a victory over death and the grave.

White's understanding of the redemption of man is based on her belief in the grace of God. She believed that God is a loving God who desires to save all people from sin. She also believed that the redemption of man is a process that begins with the new birth and continues throughout the Christian life.
